dumme, einfältige—, the silly creature; er ist ein grobes, dummes, unvernünftiges, wüßtes —, he is a rude, stupid beast; er ist ein gutes —, he is a good creature. Syn. Thier, Vieh. By the word Vieh used antithetically to Thier we understand only those domestic animals, which remain with men and are fed by him for his present or future use. It is a far more comprehensive word than the English word 'cattle' which merely implies oxen and horses; therefore V. Federvieh, Zugvieh, Mastvieh, Schlachtvieh, Rindvieh, Schafvieh &c.; now the bee is considered to be a prudent Thier, the ant for an industrious Thier. Here again 'animal' is not the full equivalent for Thier, for although all living things are animals in contradistinction to vegetables &c., the word cannot be used in common life for an insect, or a bird or a fish &c., but these words must be substituted for the German Thier as the context may happen to decide.

Thierheit, f. animality, animal or brute state. Fig. In den Zustand der — versunken seyn, im Zustande der — leben, to be sunk into a state of brutishness, to live like brutes.

Thierisch, adj. and adv. 1) relating to animals, animal. Der —e Mensch &c., animal man &c.; das —e Leben, animal life; die —e Seele, animal soul. 2) [opposed to rational, vernünftig] brute, brutal, bestial. —e Leidenschaft, Lust, —e Gefühle, brutal, animal passion, pleasure, sentiments; es ist etwas —es in seiner Gesichtsbildung, there is something of the animal in his features. Syn. Thierisch, Viehisch, Brutal. Thierisch in men is every thing, that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them. That, which is opposed to them, is Viehisch. Every gratification of coarse sensuality has something thierisch [animal, of the animal] in it, but that indulgence, which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, that is viehisch [brutish, bestial]. Brutal is an epithet for a man, his inclinations and actions, in so far as they especially stand opposed to the social, sentimental and benevolent part of his rational nature, and under the dominion of hostile passion and the coarsest sensuality. A viehischer [brutish or bestial] man wallows in the pool of vile pleasures, a brutaler [brutal] man gratifies them with force.

Thranen, v. intr. 1) to weep, to shed tears. Mit —den Augen, with tears in one's eyes. 2) [as a disease] to weep, [sometimes in this sense] to cry. 3) Fig. [of vines] to bleed. Syn. Thränen, Weinen. Thränen is in the first place used only in speaking of the eye, from which drops flow. Weinen is also of the person, who sheds the tears. From this it is clear that Weinen is an effect and expression of mental pain, but that the Thränen of the eyes may proceed from any cause whatever, for instance, from smoke, cold, a cold, a bitter cold wind and the like. Thränen is therefore 'to cry' and Weinen, 'to weep'.

Tilgbar, adj. and adv. extinguishable, redeemable. —e Schuld, Rente, redeemable debt, annuity.

Tilgbarkeit, f. quality of being redeemable, redeemableness.

Tilgen, v. tr. [Angl. Sax. tilgan, Low Sax. delgen, Lat. deleo, related to theilen] [of vermin] to exterminate, to destroy. Das Unkraut —, to extirpate weeds; eine Feuerbrunst —, to extinguish a conflagration. V. Ber—. Fig. to annul, to abolish. Eine Schuld —, to cancel, to pay a debt, [also] to cancel a debt in an account-book; eine Rente —, to buy out a rent-charge; Herr, tilge meine Sünden [in Scripture], O Lord, blot out my offences! Das —, V. Tilgung. Syn. Tilgen, Vertilgen, Ber=stören, Ausröten, Bernichten. The two last being exactly the same as in English, viz: Ausrotten to extirpate, to eradicate, to root out, and Vernichten to annihilate, it will not be necessary to explain them further. We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous &c. to us, for instance, we tilgen weeds, vermin, debts, and do so by extirpating [ausrotten], the first, and figuratively speaking the second, by paying the last; the English therefore for this is „to get rid of“; a person vertilgt however merely that, against which he employs violent measures, therefore one may say vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts, this is then „to exterminate“. A person zerstört merely those things which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by strewing them asunder and about as it were, for instance the parts of a town; time zerstört [destroys] every thing, but it does not vernichten; in a proper sense only God can do this to matter; its use therefore in both languages must be usually figurative or hyperbolic.

Umzingeln, v. tr. [ich —zingle]. Eine Festung, einen Haufen Truppen, ein Dorf —, to encompass or beleague a fortress, to surround a body of troops, to close round, surround a village; von den Feinden umzingelt seyn, to be surrounded, pent in by the enemy; Diebe —, to close round robbers. Syn. umzingeln, umgeben, umringen. In the first place a person is umgeben [surrounded] by many others, even if the circle is not yet completely closed. When the King appears at his court he is umgeben by the court dignitaries, but not umringt [encircled], still less umzingelt; for they only stand behind him and on both sides. In the next place umgeben is said also of a circle, that consists of inanimate things. The sun and the moon are sometimes umgeben by a bright circle, which is called a halo. But that, which is umringt, is shut in on all sides and into a perfect circle. We are enabled therefore to umringen [to fence in] something, that it may have no egress, and no one an ingress to the same. Umzingeln is to close something in more narrowly, to obstruct the egress and to be able to attack it from a short distance. Umringen therefore may either have a friendly or a hostile object in view, but umzingeln [to environ, to encompass] only a hostile one.

Syn. Unbeständig, Veränderlich, Wankelmüthig. Veränderlich [changeable, mutable] is an epithet for a person or thing that often and easily changes, or for any thing in general, which can be changed. Fashion is veränderlich, a man is veränderlich &c. The proportion between the sides of a triangle is called veränderlich and not unbeständig. The former therefore points more to the capability or susceptibility of undergoing change, and is not always a fault. Unbeständig implies more a defect of constancy in the state or relation once entered into, and is always a fault. For instance, an unbeständiger [inconstant] man, unbeständiges [fickle] weather. Wankelmüthig [irresolute] can naturally be only used of persons. A man is wankelmüthig, when he often changes his thoughts, his choice, his resolves before the execution of them takes place, he is unbeständig and veränderlich, when he often changes his will or plans, after having commenced the execution of them. The Wankelmüthige cannot direct his choice to any object with firmness, the Unbeständige and Veränderliche does not long remain constant to the choice he has already made; the former cannot make a beginning, the latter cannot persevere. —beständigkeit, f. inconstancy, fickleness, unsteadiness, changeableness, inconsistency [of a person], the unfixedness [of an office]. —bestechbar, —bestechlich, adj. and adv. incorruptible, not to be bribed. —bestehend, adj. and adv. [little used] unstable,

The condition, in which it is difficult to decide upon any thing, arises from the absence of reasons, which may decide the will. That makes us then ungewis [uncertain], in as far as we do not know, whether something ought to be desired, and whether it be good or essentially necessary to desire that something: Zweifelhaft [doubtful, dubious], in as much as we do not know which of two things we ought to desire, seeing that we have reasons equally cogent and potent for either side. Unentschlossenheit [irresolution] is the difficulty itself of deciding upon something, as long as we are still undecided for want of a preponderance of reasons, and this becomes Verlegenheit [embarrassment], when we positively must decide upon something, and yet cannot willingly adopt either the one or the other and make up our minds. Ungewisheit [uncertainty] makes us indifferent, Zweifelhaftigkeit [doubt] uneasy, Unentschlossenheit inactive, Verlegenheit distressed, anxious and fearful. In their highest degrees Verlegenheit becomes a dilemma causing great mental distress. —SYN. Ungewis, Zweifelhaft [as applied to things]. As long as the understanding does not yet comprehend all the reasons that tend to demonstrate the truth of a proposition, so long is it ungewis to that understanding, whether the said proposition be true or not; as long as the understanding has not yet sufficient reasons for rejecting a proposition, or for regarding it as false, so long is it ungewis [not certain], whether it be false or not. But only then is a proposition Zweifelhaft [doubtful], when the reasons for and against it are balanced. —gewissenhaft, adj. and adv. unconscientious. —gewissenhaft seyn, to be without a conscience, to have no conscience; eine —gewissenhafte Handlung, an unconscientious, unscrupulous action. —gewissenhaftigkeit, f. unconscientiousness. —gewisheit, f. incertainty, uncertainty, doubtfulness, incertitude. nen Verbrecher fällen, to pass sentence on a, to adjudge a criminal; Einem sein — vorlesen, to read over to any one his sentence; er erwartet nur noch sein — [= Verdammungs—], he now merely awaits his condemnation, [condemnatory] sentence; V. Bei—, End—. 3) [—straf] the judgment. SYN. Urtheil, Abschied, Spruch, Erkenntnis, Bescheid. Abschied in the first place is distinguished from Urtheil, Spruch and Bescheid by this, that it is an opinion, which contains the declared will of such persons, who assemble at certain periods to deliberate upon public or national affairs and form resolutions, which obtain a legal power, as soon as they are confirmed by the head of the state [this is a vote]. Urtheile, Sprüche and Bescheide on the other hand concern private affairs, but in such a manner, that the two first are only used for the decisions in suits of law. An Urtheil [judgment] is distinguished however in the second place from a Spruch [sentence] or an Ausspruch, that it is the decision of a law-judge or of a college endowed with judicial authority, since on the other hand a Spruch or an Ausspruch is also the decision of an arbitrator or the verdict of a jury. An Erkenntnis [decision] is as well the Urtheil of a court of law as the Spruch of a collective body of men versed in jurisprudence. A Bescheid is an answer, a decree, which superiors give to a representation or inquiry, and by which the party so inquiring or representing must regulate his conduct.

Urtheilen, v. intr. 1) to judge, to deliver judgment, to pass sentence. Recht —, to deliver or give an equitable judgment. 2) [generally] to deliver one's opinion, to judge. Ueber Einen or über Etwas —, to judge of any one, any thing; über ein Werk —, to judge of a work, to criticize a work; ich will Andere darüber — lassen, I will leave others to judge of it; nach sich von Andern or über Andere —, to judge of others by one's self; schlecht von Einem, über Etwas —, to judge ill of any one, of any thing; Sie können am besten von dieser Sache —, you can best judge of, form an opinion of this thing; — [in logic], to judge, to form a judgement. SYN. Urtheilen, Beurtheilen, Richten. I urtheile [form a judgement], that something is true or false, good or bad. Richten [to judge, to decree] however is to urtheilen after such a manner, that the Urtheil has a decisive power. Concerning learned works every one can urtheilen [form a judgment] but no one dares richten [pass sentence]. He who beurtheilt [criticizes &c.] something, he affirms or denies the perfections or faults of any object.

Das — eines Buches, transposition of the leaves in a book; V. Verbindung. Syn. Verbinden, Verpflichten, Verbindlichkeit, Pflicht. In English bound is a stronger expression than obliged, in German verpflichtet is stronger than verbunden, and it is so used in the courts of law in both countries. A person having entered upon a new office is verpflichtet [bound] by an oath to discharge its duties with truth and loyalty, to do which he was already verbunden [morally obliged] by his acceptance of the office. The difference however between bound and obliged is not so strong as in the two German words; verpflichtet is bound by duty, and verbunden is bound or obliged by other restraints as well, and not by a sense of duty alone. Verbindlichkeit [obligation] is the moral necessity, Pflicht is the act, which is incumbent on a person bounden or bound by it to perform. One says therefore: to act in accordance with one's Verbindlichkeit, that is to fulfil one's moral obligations and to do one's Pflicht [duty].

||Verdrieß, V. Verdruf.

Verdrießen, [in Goth. thrintan is = to afflict; in Swed. tryta = to be sad about any thing; allied to the Lat. tristis] irr. v. tr. and impers. to vex, grieve, afflict, mortify, discontent, trouble, fret, displease, offend, annoy, worry, nettle, touch, gall; to give affliction, to occasion mortification or chagrin [to any one]. Es verdrießt mich, die Sache verdrießt mich, that vexes me, the thing frets me; dies hat sie verdrossen, this has grieved, deeply mortified them; es verdrießt uns, wenn &c., it puts us out, it teazes and worries us, if &c.; es verdross ihn, daß ihr es nicht gethan habt, he was quite huffed, nettled at your not having done it; diese Beschuldigung verdross mich am meisten, this accusation stung, galled me most; sich Etwas — lassen, to allow one's self to be annoyed at, to get exasperated at any thing; mich verdreust zu leben [in Scripture], I am weary of my life; er läßt sich weder Mühe noch Kosten —, he spares neither pains nor expense; für seine Freunde muß man sich Zeit und Mühe, seine Mühe nicht — lassen, one must not begrudge one's time and trouble in the cause of one's friends; er läßt sich nichts —, he does not allow himself to be discouraged, to be rebuffed at any thing, he is down-hearted at nothing, nothing can thwart him, can make him swerve, [fam.] he won't take no for an answer. Syn. V. Dauern.

Verdrießlich, adj. and adv. 1) [grämlich, launisch &c.] vexed, angry, peevish, cross, waspish; — werden, seyn, to get angry, to get into a bad humour, to be cross, peevish, morose, it, to be sad, [fam.] to be in the blues; ein —er Mensch, a fretful, an irritable man; alte Leute sind —, old people are peevish, are easily put out, are apt to be cross; er ist von Natur —, das —e Wesen ist ihm angeboren, he is naturally bad-tempered, his irritable temperament is constitutional; Einen — machen, to make any one angry, spiteful, out of humour, to put any one into a bad temper; eine —e Miene, a cross look, an angry air. 2) [Verdruf erweckend] vexing, annoying, afflicting, afflictive. Eine —e Nachricht, sad, melancholy news; eine —e Geschichte, sad affair, annoying piece of business; eine —e Arbeit, a disgusting, sickening, repulsive, an odious work; das ist mir sehr —, that is extremely afflicting to or for me, that causes me great concern; das lange Warten ist mir —, my having to wait so long is very wearisome, tedious or tiresome, very vexations; — es Wetter, sad, gloomy, dull, [fam.] cut-throat weather. Syn. Verdrießlich, Ärgerlich, Grämlich, Launisch, Mürrisch. Verdrießlich and ärgerlich are distinguished from the rest by this, that the motives or reasons for the former are objective, whilst those for the latter are subjective. It is usual therefore to assign the cause or motive why a person is verdrießlich and ärgerlich. An impatient person soon becomes verdrießlich, if he is kept waiting too long, and a passionate person soon becomes ärgerlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpose. Moreover those persons are said to be ärgerlich who are easily vexed about trifles; invalids for instance are generally ärgerlich. He, that complains and laments, is grämlich; he, that is mürrisch, is constantly finding fault; he, that is launisch, is inconstant, at times pleased, at other times displeased without having just cause for being so, sometimes he is grämlich and mürrisch, sometimes cheerful and contented. Children can easily be grämlich, but not mürrisch, for they can complain but not find fault with. Spoiled children and women too delicately nurtured are launisch. Hence it appears that verdrießlich means sore, ärgerlich indignant, touchy, testy, and also cross, peevish; grämlich = whining, fretful, launisch capricious, fickle, and mürrisch grumbling, scolding, snappish.

Verdrießlichkeit, f. 1) ill-temper, ill-humour, bad humour. — eines Geschäfts, the disagreeableness, annoyance of an affair. 2) [verdrießliche Sache] annoyance, vexation, trouble, uneasiness, grief, affliction. Ein Anlaß zu —, cause of affliction, of annoyance, source of uneasiness; in — mit Jemand gerathen, to get into a rage or passion, to fall out with any one; sie geriethen beim Spiele in — mit einander, they took umbrage or fire at each other, they came to a quarrel while at play; um alle —en zu vermeiden, to avoid all disagreement, all sources of discontent, every thing like a catastrophe; Einem —en verursachen, to give any one a sickening, to disgust or annoy any one, to give any one the horrors; er hat sich —en zugezogen, he has brought down upon himself all sorts of disagreeables, he has brought a nest of hornets about his ears, he has got himself quite into hot water, he has embroiled himself in more respects than one.

Verdrossen, adj. and adv. [V. under Verdrießen] [faul, lässig, nachlässig] indolent, idle, lazy, indifferent to, apathetic about, careless about, listless. Zu Allem — seyn, to be tired or sick, wearied or disgusted with every thing; [in Scripture] werdet nicht —, Gutes zu thun, be not weary in well doing.

Verdrücken.

Verdrücken, v. tr. 1) to displace in pressing, to press out of its place. Fig. [improperly for unterdrücken] to suppress. 2) to press out of shape. Eine Haube —, to rumple, crush a [woman's] cap; it, [with miners] es hat der Gang verdrückt [verdrückt], the vein has narrowed, has run off tapering, has lost its strength.

Verdruf, m. [-ßeß, no pl.] [from verdrießen] [Ärger, Mißvergnügen &c.] 1) displeasure, discontent, miscontent, annoyance, vexation, disquiet, uneasiness, worry, chagrin. Voller — seyn, to be full of trouble, of mortification &c.; Einem — erregen, verursachen, to cause trouble, pain to any one, to give or occasion any one annoyance, affliction, to grieve or vex any one; ich habe viel — davon, I have had much vexation, worry about it, it has fretted or chafed me very much; ich thue dies mit —, I do this with reluctance or repugnance, against grain, with extreme dissatisfaction; daß that er mir zum —ße, he did that out of spite to me, as an annoyance to me; zu Jedermanns —ße, in spite of, in the teeth of all the world; seinen — verbergen, to conceal, dissemble one's vexation &c., one's disgust. 2) [was — erregt] Einem allen — anthun, to do against any one all sorts of vexatious things, to give or cause any one every possible annoyance; it, —, a disagreeable piece of business; es wird einen — geben, absegen, there will be some unpleasantness, trouble [about it]; er hat — mit ihm gehabt, he has had a tiff, a quarrel, a fall out, an unpleasant scene with him; ich würde beschwören nur — mit ihm bekommen, that would only give rise to disagreement, that would bring about a catastrophe, a scene between me and him. Fig. [in common people's lang.] einen — haben [= ausgewachsen or verwachsen seyn], to have a hump-back, to be hump-backed, deformed, [comic] to be built contrary to act of Parliament. Syn. Verdruf, Ärger. Verdruf [originally the same as Plage] is merely the soreness or displeasure itself, which that causes us, which any one does; Ärger is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itself, than upon external objects. Verdruf depresses, Ärger excites the mind. When the injustice committed by others affects us nearly, it makes us sad, when we regard it as deserving of punishment, we ärgern uns at it. Verdruf affects the mind, Ärger the gall. Hence it appears that Verdruf is vexation, Ärger annoyance, irritation. V. also Mißvergnügen.

Sein — pflichtmäßig einrichten, to regulate one's conduct by one's duties, V. Verhaltung. Syn. Verhalten, Aufführung, Betragen, Benehmen. The Aufführung of a young man is ascertained by many of his actions. They say, for instance, the Aufführung of a young man is good or bad. Verhalten is the agreement between our active and passive conduct and the duties which we have to attend to under certain circumstances. In Betragen we consider acts in so far as they are merits or defects of the understanding and of the heart. Soldiers have sich verhalten [conducted themselves] well, in as much as they have performed their duty, and have sich betragen [behaved] well, in so far as that, which they have done, is a proof of their valour, the chief virtue with persons of their profession. In the one instance they have sich verhalten [kept themselves] strict to their duty, in the other they have sich betragen [borne or carried themselves] courageously or coolly. Benehmen is the result and sign of prudence, skill, address, pliancy, presence of mind or else of the absence of these qualities. This therefore is 'behaviour', and consequently Aufführung means 'conduct'.

there. II. v. refl. sich an Etwas —, to buy any thing too dear, at too heavy a price; proverb an guter Waare verkauft man sich niemals, a good article is never too dear. Das —, sale, vent, vending, selling, [in law] open or public sale, auction. Syn.
Verkaufen, Verhandeln, Absetzen, Vertreiben. The parting with any article for a certain price is denoted by verkaufen and verhan-deln. Verhandeln differs however from verkaufen in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called handeln. Now such a handeln may last some time, when both sides are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence verhan-deln frequently expresses verkaufen together with the extraneous idea of self-advantage, and is therefore used in a contemptuous sense. Absetzen is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is lessened by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person; when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers and especially living remote from each other, then one says, he vertreibt them, or he carries on a large or brisk Vertrieb in this article. Hence verkaufen is to sell, verhandeln to bargain, absetzen to dispose of, and vertreiben to carry on business, to do business.

Verleügnen, V. Verläugnen.

Verleümden, v. tr. to calumniate, libel, backbite. Einen —, to calumniate any one; man hat ihn bei seinen Vorgesetzten verleumdet, his superiors have had calumnies against him instilled into their minds. Das —, V. Verleumdung. SYN. Verleümden, Verunglimpfen, Lästern, Anschwärzen, Splitterrichten. He, who verleumdet a person to others, relates to those others false, or at all events, unproved facts to the detriment of that person's character &c. He, who verunglimpft him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, illiberally, odiously. The highest degree of Verunglimpfen is Lästern. For one lästert that person, on whose perfectly moral and honorable actions and on whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgement degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition therefore verleümden is to backbite or to scandalize, for scandal is either false or not proved, verunglimpfen is to cry down, to detract from, to asperse, and lästern is to calumniate, to slander, to vilify. Now verleümden and verunglimpfen together constitute anschwärzen, in as far as the person so verleumdet and verunglimpft stood in good repute previously with those to whom he is now verleumdet, and in as far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore to blacken, to libel, and especially the English word to traduce. Splitterrichten is to judge trivial, nay the most trifling faults with too much severity. It has generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immaculate conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is 'to carp or cavil at' but is only fully rendered by the familiar expressions of 'to pick holes' or 'to run down'.

Verleümden, m. [-s, pl. -], —inn, f. calumniator, slanderer, detractor, libeller, defamer.

Verliebeln, v. tr. 1) Den ganzen Tag —, to be making love, to make love all day long, to be flirting the whole day. 2) Sein Geld &c. —, to spend, to lose one's money &c. in, by lovemaking.

Verlieben, v. refl. 1) sich —, to fall in love, to be smitten or enamoured with, to become amorous; sich in ein Mädchen —, to fall in love with a girl; sie ist in ihn verliebt, [in pop. lang.] ist nârrisch in ihn verliebt, she is in love with him, is dotingly fond of him; sterblich verliebt seyn, to die for love; er ist nârrisch in seine Frau verliebt [in fam. lang.], he dotes on his wife; er verliebt sich in jeden Unterrock, in jede Schürze [in pop. lang.], he falls in love with the first pretty face he sees, he is a regular smockhunter or smellsmock; sie ist in sich selbst verliebt, she is in love with herself; er ist sehr verliebt, verliebter Natur, he is very amorous, of an amorous constitution or complexion; ver- liebte Blicke, Gedanken, Reden, amorous looks, thoughts, speeches; verliebt seuffzen, ansehn, to sigh, look amorously. Fig. [in fam. lang.] Ich habe mich ganz in diesen Gar- ten, in dieses Kleid, in dieses Pferd verliebt, I have quite fallen in love with, I have taken a desperate liking to this garden, dress, horse; in ein Buch &c. verliebt seyn, to be quite taken up with a book &c. 2) [chiefly with the accent on the first syllable] to cease loving, to cease to love. Die Liebe verliebt sich leicht, love soon palls, soon passes or flies away. Syn. Verlieben, sich, Lieben, Vergaffen, sich, Vernarren, sich. In the first place lieben is distinguished from the other words by its signifying both a rational and sensual delight produced by the real or supposed perfections of another person; the other words on the contrary denote merely a sensual and so strong a passionate delight as in part to rob reason of her sway. Vergaffen is a Verlieben, which is solely grounded on one's admiration of a fine face. Hence lieben is to love, verlieben to fall desperately in love, and vergaffen to fall in love with a pretty face, or, with a pair of bright eyes. When one says of a person, who is verliebt [smitten], that he is vernarrt, one wishes to convey the idea that his love is silly and absurd, over which reason has no control; sich vernarren therefore is our 'to dote'.

Vernehmen, irr. v. tr. 1) to become aware of a thing by means of the senses, to perceive. Das Thier hat den Jäger vernommen or gemerkt [in sportsmen's lang.], the beast has got scent or sight of the hunter, has heard him, knows that he is by; it. —, to perceive by the hearing, to hear; ich habe nur einige Laute vernommen, I have only heard or caught some sounds; ein Tauber vernimmt selbst Kanonenschüsse nicht, a deaf person doesn't even hear the report of cannon. 2) Etwas — [erfahren], to hear or learn; euch ist gegeben, daß ihr das Geheimniß des Himmelreichs vernehmet [in Scripture], unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God; ich habe noch nichts davon vernommen, I haven't yet heard any thing of it; man hat so eben vernommen, daß &c., it has just been heard or ascertained, that &c.; sich — lassen [fam.], to give to understand, [fam.] to have to know; [in chancery] Einem zu — geben, to inform any one, to declare or make known to any one. 3) to discern by the ear, to distinguish, detect or recognize by hearing. In einem Singchore hören wir auch die schwächste Stimme, aber wir — sie nicht [einzeln heraus], in a chorus of voices we hear even the weakest voice, but we do not distinguish it, we do not recognize it apart; Eines Stimme —, to distinguish, recognize, know any one's voice. Syn. Vernehmen, Hören. We hear [hören] a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernehmen it, when we distinguish it, hence vernehmen in this sense is to hear distinctly. 4) [in Scripture] Keiner vernahm [verstand] des Andern Sprache, no one understood the language of the other; Jesus vernahm aber ihre Gedanken, Jesus knew their thoughts; der natürliche Mensch aber vernimmt nichts vom Geiste Gottes, the natural man however understands nothing of the spirit of God. Syn. Vernehmen, Verstehen. In order to understand a speech fully it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words, of which it is composed, and secondly that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of those words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker, and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that however distinctly a person may vernehmen [hear] or catch the words, which the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen [understand] him without previously having a knowledge of the language used, or, if in his own language, of the things forming the topics of that discourse. 5) [= erhören]

The objects of the Verstand [understanding] are ideas and judgements, the objects of the Vernunft the connexion of things, the objects of the Urtheilskraft [judgement] good and bad, perfection and imperfection in things, or in general the true value of them. A clear Verstand is requisite for this, a lucid and practised Vernunft, a mature Ur- theilskraft so as to propound this in a connected manner, aptly and profitably to those that listen. For it is impossible to impart to others lucid ideas, if one has them not one's self, and only a ripe practised Vernunft surveys the connection of a series of truths and finds the transitions from one thought to another, and a mature Beurtheilungskraft knows what is good, fitting and serviceable.

Das —, V. Versicherung. SYN. Versichern, Sicherheit geben, Sicherheit stellen. Versichern takes place even by mere words, whether the danger, which some one apprehends, be a pure error, in other respects a harmless one, or whether it be a loss of one's property. Now an Insurance office versichert [insures] ships, buildings, estates &c., versichert [insures or assures] lives. Sicherheit geben and stellen take place in the first place by removing the apprehension, that some one will not act up to his obligations, and either can take place by several modes of proceeding. Sicherheit stellen by the more formal word stellen is distinguished from Sicherheit geben; in as much as it takes place before legal authorities. This is therefore to give or find bail; the other is the same as in English, to give security.

Versicherung, f. 1) Die — einer Thatsache &c., the assurance of a fact &c.; man kann ihm trotz aller seiner —en nicht glauben, he cannot be believed in spite of all his pro-siegte Kuh, a dry cow; meine Thränen werden nie —, my tears will never dry up, will never cease to flow. Fig. [aufhören, vergehen] to cease, to pass away, to flow by. II.

v. tr. [— machen] [little used] to dry up. Das —, drying up. Syn. Versiegen, Vertrocknen, Verdorren. Vertrocknen is not only used when speaking of water, but of any moisture, and even of things, which lose their moisture. This is then, to dry up. Verdorren only of things, which together with the moisture lose the nourishing juices, without which their life cannot be supported, and this is to wither up.
Versiegen merely denotes the diminution of the depth and the total disappearance of the moisture in any reservoir. A source, a stream versiegt [dries up, fails, becomes empty or shallow].

Versilberer, m. [-s, pl. -] [not much used] divine essence, he is absorbed in the Divinity; dieser Mensch, die Sittlichkeit dieses Menschen versinkt immer mehr, this man sinks, the morals of this man keep sinking deeper and deeper, lower and lower. Das —, sinking.

— der Sitten, depravity. Syn. Versinken, Vertiefen, sich. — Versunken, Vertieft.
A man is vertieft, when his feelings, his powers of summoning up the past or of anticipating the future are for the time obscured or diminished by too great an exertion of the mind; versunken when they are so by strong depressing passion. In grief, affliction, pain a man is versunken. Now as a man is versunken in pain, so is he vertieft in reflections, considerations, investigations. Versungen is therefore, 'sunk', hence depressed, the other, 'lost or absorbed'.

Das —, V. Versöhnung. Syn. Versöhnen, Ausöhnen, Sich wieder Vertragen. Sich wieder vertragen with a person merely means to restore unanimity between that person and one's self. Versöhnen and ausöhnen, to forgive the injuries occasioned by him, and to wish to live no longer in enmity with him. Sich vertragen therefore only puts away disunion, and thence it is said of all persons, who live in harmony, that they sich vertragen [are friendly together], that they agree well together. Those persons consequently vertragen sich [agree together again], who were merely separated by differences of opinion. They who sich versöhnen [become reconciled to each other], had insulted each other, lived in hostility, hated each other and mutually endeavoured to be revenged. But persons who had lived in friendship with each other must be ausgesöhnt [made friends again, must make it up again].

Er hat Zuckungen gehabt, welche ihm das ganze Gesicht verstellt haben, he has had convulsions, which have distorted his whole face; die Art, wie sie sich kleidet, verstellt sie sehr, her mode of dressing disguises her very much, does not at all set her off to advantage. Das —, V. Verstellung. Syn. Verstellen, Verunstalten, Entstellen. Verstellen merely denotes, that a man by an alteration of his figure has become difficult to be recognized, without deciding, whether he has become uglier in consequence of this alteration. Verunstalten denotes that his figure or shape has lost more or less of its beauty and perfection. Entstellen expresses both these ideas together; he, who is entstellt, is uglier and less perfect as to his form, and in consequence of this impairment has become so changed as not to be recognized. Every kind of mutilation verunstaltet [impairs] a man, but it does not follow that it verstellt [disguises] him and entstellt [disfigures] him, if it does not at the same time render it impossible or very difficult for people to recognize him. II. v. refl. sich —, to feign, dissemble, counterfeit. Der Höfling verstellt sich auf tausenderlei Art, the courtier disguises himself in a thousand ways, puts on a thousand different shapes &c.; man kann sich nicht lange —, one cannot dissemble long; er weiß sich trefflich zu —, er ist ein Meister in der Kunst sich zu —, he knows capitally how to counterfeit, he is a master in the art of dissembling, of dissimulation; it. sich in Etwas —, to disguise or metamorphose one's self into any thing; der Satan verstellt sich in einen Engel des Lichts [in Scripture], Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Syn. Verstellen, sich, Stellen, sich. Sich verstellen is not to allow one's real opinions to be known; sich stellen is to endeavour to palm off upon another as one's opinions those which are not so in reality; the first is therefore to dissemble and the second to feign, to simulate; the antithesis between them is fully shewn by the following latin line: „Quod non es simulas, dissimulasque quod es“, „Thou feignest to be what thou art not, and thou dissemblest what thou art.“ „Du stellst dich (daß zu seyn, was du nicht bist), und du verstellst dich (daß zu seyn, was du bist).

Verstellung, f. derangement, disarrangement. Fig. dissimulation, pretence, feint, disguising. Die Wahrheit wird trotz aller — erkannt, [the] truth is recognized in spite of all concealment, of all disguise; ohne — reden, to speak without reserve or disguise; das Alles ist lauter —, all that is sheer pretence, [fam. rather low] that is all regular sham, mere humbug; that is all a hum.

Verträppeln, Vertrappen, v. tr. [in common people's lang.] to spoil by tramping, by walking clumsily.

Vertrauen, I. v. intr. Einem —, to trust [to] any one, to confide in, to repose confidence in any one; vertraue keinem Freunde, den du nicht erprobt hast, trust no untried friend; er vertrauet Gott allein, vertrauet allein auf Gott, he puts his trust in God alone, he trusts only to God; derjenige, auf welchen ich vertrauet habe, hat mich ver-rathen, he, in whom I placed my confidence, has betrayed me, seinem Stücke —, to trust to one's fortune; ich vertraue seinen Einsichten, I confide in his views; ich vertraue, Gott werde zulassen &c., I trust, God will permit &c. II. v. tr. Einem Etwas — [anvertrauen], to entrust or confide something to any one; diesem Menschen wollte ich meine Ehre &c. nicht —, I would not entrust my honour &c. to this man; sich Einem —, to trust or confide in any one, it. [= anvertrauen] to communicate a secret, to open one's heart to any one; diesem Arzte möchte ich mich nicht —, I would not commit or entrust my fate to this, put myself into the hands of this physician; Einem ein Geheimnis —, to confide a secret to any one, to entrust any one with it; — Sie mir Ihren Kummer, confide your grief to me, impart to me the secret of your grief; ich möchte Ihnen ein paar Worte —, I wish to say a few words to you in confidence, in secret; er hat mir sein Vorhaben vertrauet, he has imparted to me his design; sich Einem —, to unbosom one's self to any one, to disclose one's mind to any one; der Erde den Samen —, to commit, entrust the seed to the earth. Syn. Vertrauen, Trauen, Verlassen, sich. These words signify the expectation we form of the power and will of another. We traue [trust him], when we simply apprehend no evil at his hands, we vertrauen [confide in] him, when we expect good at his hands. As we can only expect good from God, and since it is utterly impossible, that he can wish any thing evil, it would be too feeble an expression to say we traue [trust] him, we must vertrauen [confide in] him. The expectation, that lies at the root of these ideas, may have different degrees of certainty; the highest of which is expressed by sich verlassen [to rely upon] some one or something.

Vertrauen, n. [-s, no pl.] 1) confidence, trust. Sein — auf Jemand, auf Etwas setzen, to put one's confidence in any one, any thing; — zu Einem, zu Etwas haben, fassen, to have, to take or gain confidence in any one, thing; Einem sein — schenken, to bestow one's confidence upon any one; er besitzt mein —, he possesses, has, enjoys my confidence; sein — auf den Reichtum setzen, to put one's confidence, to set one's trust in riches; ich habe kein — zu diesem Menschen, zu seinen Versprechungen, I have no confidence, no faith in this man, in his promises; ein Kaufmann hat — bei Andern nöthig, for a merchant confidence on the part of others is essential. 2) [hope in the silence &c. of another] confidence. any one mildly about something. Das —, V. Verweisung. Syn. Verweisen, Vorhalten, Vorwerfen, Vorrücken, Aufmühen. We accuse or charge any one with a fault, in the first place, when it is still uncertain whether he has committed it or not, in order that he may be enabled to justify himself or excuse himself or merely acknowledge it. This act is expressed by vorhalten. We admonish, lecture or rebuke him for it, because we punish him by testifying to him our displeasure, with the view of effecting an amelioration of conduct in him.
This is verweisen. We reproach him with it or to use a homely expression, we throw it in his teeth, in his face, when we mention it with the view of annoying him. This is vorwerfen. Vor-rücken is only a stronger expression, implying that one enters more into the details of the matter.
This is to upbraid him with it. Aufmühen is distinguished from Vorwerfen by the subordinate idea, that one magnifies the blame of the erring party by giving greater importance to a mere pec-cadillo than it really has, that is, to be too sharp upon, to rate. V. also Verbannen.
